I'm playing 5v5 jungle (not ranked, but I'm sure a lot of you will have 5v5 ranked games) and I'm having a hard time understanding what the correct strategy is. When you're a support jungle you can just sit in your lane until your team needs help, but when you're a carry jungle you pretty much only help your teammates by staying in their lane (and not chasing the dragon) and getting the kills. In the ranked games I play, I'm almost always on against an assassin so I'm rarely able to farm jungle camps and have to rely on jungler assist plays or dragon/baron jungle with support jungler. So my question is, what strategy works for the jungler in a 5v5 ranked game and what tactics should you use to have a successful game. Should you farm camps? What about ganking? You are doing more ganks now than you were as a support jungler. You should probably build some sort of AoE slow but I'm not sure how to decide what to build. I've found if you summon the jungle to gank a little bit later in the game it doesn't really work as the minions that are close to dying by the time you can use them die quickly. I've heard the theory you should summon it when there's a couple minions left for everyone else to take and you get more of an edge or when a 4th member is really low on health and you can help kill him quicker. (This is on a ranked game but I'm sure on a normal game you shouldn't gank unless your minions are at least about 50% done with their push.) How would you handle the gank situation, and how about the general jungle strategy, and the farming strategy? A: In early game, you'll be farming your jungle camps and giving the rest of the team some experience. You will need to use your gank strategy only when your jungler is low on health and the minions are coming. An item
